September 2011

Greetings, Friend of VCOG!

ACCESS 2011 - Monticello

Thomas Jefferson's historic home on the bucolic hill will be the backdrop for VCOG's 12th conference on 29 at Monticello for a panel on access to campus email, featuring key players in the dispute over UVa's response to a FOIA request for a former professor's email. Another panel will feature local public officials grilling journalists on the use (and abuse?) of access laws. VCOG will acknowledge its annual award winners, and the staff of the Thomas Jefferson Foundation will be on hand with a presentation, too.

A Tribute to Robert M. O'Neil

Don your finest attire Oct. 29 to pay tribute to a great hero of open government and free expression, Bob O'Neil. Bob is VCOG's founding president, and the retiring founder of the Thomas Jefferson Center for the Protection of Free Tech. VCOG salutes these schools and these students, both of whom realize that it's never too early to embrace the values of an open, transparent government.

Rejected Voter Applications
The VCOG Board of Directors has recommended that VCOG file a friend of the court brief in the 4th Circuit case over access to rejected voter registration applications. A federal district court in Norfolk said the state law prohibiting access to the applications conflicted with a federal law that expressly allowed access (provided SSNs were redacted). A brief in support of the right of access is due mid-October.

Open government news
The FOIA Council ruled on the last day of August that section 40.1-11 of the Virginia Code served to exempt certain records generated by the Virginia Occupation Safety and Health Compliance Program....The Chesterfield School Board caught flack for a policy it adopted in June that discouraged individual members from speaking to the press (or public) without first running it by the board chair or the district's public relations department. VCOG criticized these and others school district policies as examples of public bodies preferring clean and efficient decisions, despite democracy's often-messy open processes....In an Aug. 5 opinion to the Goochland County Electoral Board secretary, Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli ruled that two members of a three-member electoral board could not talk to each other on the phone about board business without following FOIA's procedures on public meetings....When asked for records relating to how much Orange County would be paying its part-time attorney, board chairman Lee Frame said of the... contract, "It's not required to be released, so we're not going to release it." FOIA, however, says that employment contracts must be released....After months of haggling and much public scrutiny, the University of Virginia finally released to the American Tradition Institute emails from former climate science professor Michael Mann....Prince William County is suing the Department of Homeland Security over the release of records related to the illegal immigrants the county turns over to DHS. The federal FOIA request was prompted when on an individual earlier turned over to the department, Carlos Martinelly Montano, was released and later killed a nun while driving drunk.
